

Zena Crenshaw-Logal, J.D.

Author, Human Rights Defender, Public Policy Analyst, and Executive Director of National Judicial Conduct and Disability Law Project, Inc.

National Judicial Conduct and Disability Law Project, Inc. (NJCDLP) is a national U.S. legal system reform organization and corporate sponsor of Theatre for Justice as well as Golden Badge, a support group for law enforcement whistleblowers. Dr. Crenshaw-Logal is a NJCDLP co-founder as well as its Executive Director.

Crenshaw-Logal specializes in the mobilization of communities on a grassroots basis for their self-empowerment and to combat injustice. Her forte in that regard is organizational infrastructure and program development as well as administration. She has done extensive event planning for community meetings, public rallies, teach-ins/expos, national conferences, and even a stage play.

As co-founder of multiple nonprofit good government advocacy groups in America, Crenshaw-Logal has helped challenge every seriously questionable aspect of America's legal system. Undoubtedly the most controversial of these initiatives seeks appropriate, but dramatic expansion of U.S. state and federal judicial accountability. The overriding goal is to exalt America's judiciary while raising the world's consciousness of judicial misconduct in America; conduct that sometimes constitutes criminal activity (including intentional rights violations) and is inadequately checked by U.S. domestic and international anti-corruption/accountability mechanisms - an oversight shortfall spread among all branches of American government that has evolved into a constitutional and human rights crisis.

Education

- Northwestern University School of Law - Juris Doctorate, Law
- University of Notre Dame London Law Centre - Land Use Planning and Management/Development
- University of Notre Dame Du Lac - Bachelor of Arts, Philosophy and English